

PhD Course in Research Integrity and Ethics

The PhD course in research integrity and ethics is offered three times a year: twice in Danish and once in English. We have already scheduled the courses for 2020. This means that it is possible to get an overview of whether the courses are in English/Danish, where the courses are taking place (in Aarhus or Copenhagen) and, not least, which subject areas are represented by the course instructors. This is a faculty-based course, and we strive to address ethics across the faculty's various subject areas. Having said that, however, some of the subject compositions might be more relevant for some of you than others. So here is an overview. Please be aware that registration for the courses operates on a first-come, first-served basis and we can therefore not guarantee that you will receive a place on your desired course.

Courses in 2020:

Jette Kofoed (child research and media research) and Hans Fink (philosophy) are course instructors on every course.

June: Nina Koefoed (history), Morten Dige (philosophy) and Line Dalsgård (anthropology).

August/September: Martijn van Beek (anthropology), Finn Olesen (information studies), Casper Andersen (philosophy of science/post-colonial theory)

November/December: Finn Olesen (information studies), Rubina Raja (archaeology), Mads Rosendahl (comparative literature)
